

Exploring all your options to continue playing for years

Hockey is the most fun of all sports. A lot of kids don't ever want it to end. There are many rungs of FREE-to-Play hockey for good players from ages 16-25 who are willing to put in the work. Every year there are more and more teams, meaning the number of roster spots is continually growing. Most families are unaware of how many options there are, as are most coaches.

If your goal is to keep progressing and you'd like to advance from the youth and high school levels to Free-to-Play Junior and eventually Collegiate hockey, you may benefit from a trusted partner to help you get there. Eden Hall's recommended advisor for players in this category is familiar with both the new and established Junior leagues throughout North America and is respected by dozens of the strongest coaches when it comes to moving their players on to NCAA college hockey.
