

Using hockey to get the best education

Hockey ends. For everybody, eventually. For strong students, many leave their playing days and transition quickly into successful careers as a result of obtaining Ivy League and equivalent degrees from top colleges in the Northeast United States.

Eden Hall's recommended advisor in this area is a former coach of one of the top Prep School hockey teams in New England where he also served as an admissions counselor assisting students with the college application process. Dozens of players he's coached have moved on to high profile Hockey East and ECAC teams including the Ivy League, as well as NESCAC schools like Amherst, Bowdoin, Middlebury, and Williams. A former member of USA Hockey's National Team, his focus is now on marrying his background as a high-level player and educator to help those looking to go as far as they can in the sport while exiting with a great foundation for the future.
