

NHL Prospect

He wasn't even 15. You knew your son was good, but you weren't prepared for people contacting you so soon. Coaches from Midget teams. Private schools. Family advisors...you aren't sure what those are but realize you better find out. Guys from Junior leagues with a ton of confusing letters that don't make sense like C vs. B or A vs. AAA.

Eden Hall's preference if your family falls into this category is to see you align with someone who becomes part of your household through the highs and lows found leading up to and throughout a professional career. If that person isn't in your life already, perhaps an introduction is in order. My colleague works with big name active NHL players, often beginning those relationships when they were early in high school.
